James Krone

Waterhome

Kavi Gupta Berlin. Kluckstr. 31

February 24 - April 6 2012

Kavi Gupta Gallery Berlin is proud to present Waterhome, an installation by Berlin-based artist James Krone. A performance of exposures, constructed over the past three years, Waterhome is a series of choreographed aesthetic procedures in reaction to a contained natural phenomena; it is an ongoing work with the memory of its own making, its own being and its own entropy. The work began in 2008 with an empty glass aquarium, a representation of nothingness that soon began to grow algae and destroy any illusion of purity or the totality of a void.

In this particular installation of the work, Waterhome winds its way through the entire gallery space, consisting of a series of paintings hung from trellis structures, various found and made objects, including the aquarium, in its perpetual state of production, set upon a cement plinth.

In the silent authority of the production of algae, sum consciousness spills over, paying less terror to the myth of the void, collapsing breathless taxonomies and rabid similes; growing to resemble something more like a misshapen pearl.