The Plots had often talked about the fact that nothing lasts forever but each secretly held on to the hope that they would be different. What none of them had imagined was the possibility that one of them would simply stop working.

C Plot wanted to tell them it wasn't that things were getting worse, more that they were staying the same. But the wave of contagion had already started breaking and C Plot focused on sniffing out where the next leak would spring.

They decided it was best to show the screens how vulnerable they had become to these leaks and blackouts. In their surrender, they realized it wasn't evident who they were appealing to. For A Plot, whose elbow needed replacing, it didn't even matter: all of A Plot's joints had frozen. It wasn't clear if this was an act of solidarity or if the joints had all stopped working.

"SHE'S SPEAKING, I'M DYING. DROPPING DEAD. MOP THE FLOOR WITH MY BODY I AM DONE."

Things had gotten out of hand. No one could verify what was happening, Liberty was dying and then undying the next day. But it was C Plot who seemed to suffer the worst.

"It's the way we were made," A Plot said, walking into the flames and admitting defeat. Sometime later, B Plot would call out "We make mistakes!"

C Plot was the only one of the three to know that this had all happened before, perhaps even simultaneously.
