death. The cessation of all life functions in a living being, causing its life essence (also known as consciousness, spirit, or soul) to depart the physical body. Certain life essences have temporarily continued to exist in known realities after death: dach in the astral body. An astral body whose physical form has died is called a ghost. The final fate of the life essence or soul after death is not known to science. See astral body, Death, death gods, ectoplasm, ghost.
Death. The quasi-physical metaphysical being who embodies death. See entry on Death.
