Essex Flowers is pleased to present Guardian, a two-person exhibition featuring Ester Partegàs and Claire Watson.

Both artists create composite structures, joining and mending fragmentary materials to twist and refresh our perceptions of familiar objects. There is an aspect of care or maintenance; the artists pull apart seams, suturing and reconstituting these elements to form uncanny embodied wall works and sculptures imbued with presence. Their work brings into question the life of the commodified object and the labor associated with it, whether it is a laundry basket or the sewn garment. What has traditionally been known as “womxn’s work” is receiving a new life and meaning here, resisting the innate gendered associations.

Watson’s pieces source used leather garments, permeable skins with embedded, unique histories. In this particular body of work, she composes the individual pattern pieces from leather coats to form totemic entities with features created with punctured slits. What had previously served as a protective barrier for the body becomes a body in itself, speaking to us from a past or a future we can't place, in a voice that is seemingly ancient and yet unknown.

In her series of sculptures referencing the laundry basket, Partegàs creates shelters or traps that have a sense of play and makeshift precarity. The agglomerate forms are constructed and deconstructed, propped and braced. Planes of plywood, cardboard, papier-mâché and plaster are perforated by exaggerated portholes, both mimicking the motif of the laundry basket, but essentially emphasizing the porosity of the form, leaving an opening for the viewer to project themselves inside. There is an unresolved tension between tenderness and control, guardian and overseer.
