

Mary Manning: Trees is as good as anything

5/21/17 — 6/26/17

Mary is a photographer. Her subjects include dance performances, the plastic partition between street and inside a bodega, trees, lovers, plastic bags. She weaves together the invisible relationships that happen between the visible subjects. For her show Manning was thinking about Alice Notley's poem, As Good As Anything; particularly the last line of the poem where Alice states, "What difference does it make? I like my poems. They're as good as rocks."
