Lauren Coullard Covered in Feathers

June 25 – July 30, 2022

Opening Friday June 24, 6–9 pm

... The smell was chloroform or iodine, the salt in tears in the throat like salt water. In and out of sleep and dreams, perhaps nightmares, the dreams remembering and rehearsing other nightmares: The dead wolf I lifted into the pickup on a gravel road near Baudette in Minnesota came back in my sleep and went into my mouth so it filled my body. I rode a huge crow to the river with silver reins. He drank from a sandbar. When they came for me feathers came out of my body which jerked and I flew away and could see them below. The old Sam Creekmouth, not this one and he had no ear and his cheek was like tattered leather was teaching me to be a creek mouth like that one when I was young beside the cooking-iron pot on the Missouri. I was a soft old marsh hawk caught between buildings in NYC and the doctor helped me out. In the desert the coyote and cobra went into my spine to be part of my spine and skull. That's too many animals for one body ...
