I draped my dresses between the white rabbit and Marilyn Monroe, who always looks after you when you walk by. I made two princess dresses, one pink and one blue. Then I painted three or four more dresses, one in Paris one in London and one in New York. We arranged the dresses so you can see them clearly from the outside. Anne's furniture is right in front of them at the window. I also read a story, a ghost story because the next day was Halloween. People arrived on time and they were all dressed up. One came as a princess and one came as the zombie of a dead artist. I created beautiful glasses and together we drank gunpowder punch.
