A few weeks ago, I was listening to an interview with Depeche Mode (Dave Gahan and Martin Gore) about the origins of their sound. How it wasn't necessarily novel at the time, but they were into trying things out and using their synthesizers. The word "synth" was repeated over and over again. And it reminded me of how I was putting together this group show of different artists I like – the first summer show at my upstairs space on Broadway.

Synth is a group show made up of artists who work in many ways across a variety of different media, much like the way a synthesizer makes noise – the parts of a wave form that make sound: attack, decay, sustain, and release. The metaphor can be applied to all of the works in the show, and the unexpected interaction between them. Apologies for the short ending but the show is about to open.

Kate Werble Gallery summer hours are Wednesday – Friday, 12 PM – 5 PM and by appointment. For further information please email info@katewerblegallery.com.
