On a thirsty march toward saltier air, dreams drain in a vinyl stream - now and for a hundred years already.

It's been wet, and when the walls have something to say it usually has to do with the roof, the window, the mind-framed garden of the world.

Wood flown around the globe, marble dragged across the continents, severing glass on the sides of trucks - messages wrung from the absurd.

The spirits know we're trying, we have those gloves on and we squeeze the little ducts all the time.
