The Serpent's Egg is a 1977 United States / West German co-produced film (with English and German dialogue) directed by Ingmar Bergman and starring David Carradine as Abel Rosenberg, which is set in 1920s Berlin. This was Bergman's one and only Hollywood film. The title is taken from a line spoken by Brutus in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar:

And therefore think him as a serpent's egg

Which hatch'd, would, as his kind grow mischievous;

And kill him in the shell.

Follow the trail. Ooof Bourse! Balls / Stock Exchange

The paradox of the precarious egg perched on top of a brick wall. A riddle of Carroll.

The spiral, the line, the dot, and the curve are the debris of an explosion that the canvas captured..
Precarious gestures of potential.

The bricks maintain their form while language, always fluid and pervading, shapes them.
