In this work, Chris Reinecke analyzes her experience of an intercontinental flight from Paris to Bogotá and condenses the visual impressions of the journey and the technicality of flying into a multi-part collage. Reinecke draws, cuts up and reassembles. Her personal perception blends with the objective view of a television image, depicting the airplane from above. In several drawings, as a sequence of movements and a technical representation, we see the plane landing on an aircraft carrier. The markings of the runway and its perspective distortion create a complex geometry that covers the entire collage, while short descriptions and individual terms intersect the composition.

The collage on display is part of the series of works „Die Beobachterin verlässt ihren stationären Posten“, which began in the early 90s. It forms a bridge between Chris Reinecke's early works and her current work. Her artistic practice, which has always been an instrument of social transformation, participation and direct political expression, is constantly evolving in relation to social conditions, as well as Reinecke's personal circumstances. These changed decisively when she ended her almost thirty-year teaching career in the mid nineties. She always focused on people, their immediate surroundings and the city in which they lived together. Now she leaves her stationary post, using various techniques in texts, drawings and photographs to depict what she had experienced and imagined in complex compositions. In the collages created during this time, narratives, sequences of movement and precise observations are superimposed. The visual vocabulary developed for this purpose forms the basis for her current artistic production.
