Some paintings make worlds that continue.
Others are finished and the entity moves on.
That will do: enough colour, enough detail,
lessons in stillness, or punctuation.
The lightning goddess, her isolation,
the way she can fit in anywhere, her problems,
is not everyone's bag. Without her,
the typologies or ontologies of painting,
its method and materials, are in repose.
(Gwynneth Porter, from untitled text accompanying Studies, Hopkinson Cundy, Auckland, 2010)
