For his second solo exhibition in Marseille, Mathis Collins draws on the image and function of art therapy, both as a reflection of his ten years spent leading socio-cultural workshops and as a way to explore the role that therapy can play in popular cultures. To produce this exhibition, Mathis Collins undertook training as an art therapist, aiming to add cognitive tools to his role as an artist-facilitator and formal tools to his repertoire as a visual artist. The exhibition at La Rose is imagined as a space that is both self-therapy and a caricature of the artist as healer, positioned somewhere between a waiting room and a carnival.
