Adams and Ollman is pleased to present There's Something About Maria, a two-person exhibition featuring Vaginal Davis and ektor garcia. The artists, who first met in 2013, developed a friendship through years of correspondence, discovering shared interests in unearthing or re-inscribing forgotten histories and traditions, material experimentation, and unconventional modes of production. The exhibition will include sculptural installations, paintings, and collaborative works that pay homage to personal histories within broader cultural narratives, myth-making, and community and family traditions.

Both artists challenge traditional ways of making and disseminating art and ideas. Davis, whose history includes hosting parties, self-publishing zines, and gossiping, creates work for and with friends and fellow artists, often displayed in her Berlin atelier, heard on the radio, or experienced in her presence. garcia pushes boundaries and upends expectations of materials and objects. Like his sculptures and installations, garcia works fluidly across geographies in a nomadic practice that traces material use and tradition from place to place.

There's Something About Maria centers on the polycultural figure of Mary, whose name, possibly Egyptian in origin, has dual meanings—"beloved" and "rebellious." The iconic Mary becomes an archetypal third presence in the exhibition, embodying the power and wisdom of the divine feminine and evoking ideas of motherhood, family lineage, and ancestral knowledge. For Davis, Mary also has a more personal meaning—it was the name of her mother, Mary Magdalene Duplantier. For garcia, Mary was once a pseudonym.

Central to There's Something About Maria is Davis's constellation of painted portraits of various women, all named Mary, from various walks of life including cinema, literature, and science. This suite of "Marys" creates a through-line between famous, infamous, and unknown women—an unlikely cohort of historical, cultural, and political figures, including Marie Curie, Maria Montessori, and Mary Queen of Scots—across time and place. Presenting themselves as ghostly apparitions atop notes and to-do lists, the paintings in the show are created with unconventional materials such as make-up, medicines, tonics, and powders in reference to beauty standards, artifice, identity, witchcraft, and the history of Black alternative medicine.

Maria is a ubiquitous name and subject in the religious traditions and handicrafts of Mexican Catholic culture which deeply influence garcia's work. Motifs and imagery found in this religious material culture—flames, hands, lace—appear throughout garcia's ceramic sculptures and sculptural assemblages. The sculptures, resembling things from everyday life such as ropes, doilies, chains, curtains, pots, belts, and industrial castoffs, perform personal and poetic functions in the form of portable repositories or mementos that represent a form of personal activism, and celebrate those who have carried forward undervalued traditions while challenging gendered, classed, and racialized biases surrounding craft and labor. garcia offers a reverential retooling that rethink conventional value systems, proposing materiality as an active agent with the power to cross geographical boundaries, advocate on our behalf, or watch over us. In the exhibition, the artist's vessels are both functional and poetic, creating a venerated space; his finely crafted crochet, handmade with thin copper wire, further demarcates the space, charging it with an erotic, electric energy.
