Gaylen Gerber's installation for Art at the Edge creates an opulent space for active contemplation. At its heart is a lush grove of fruit-bearing trees bordered by an enormous opalescent painting and smaller images of ordinary places, such as a backyard, or a cafe facade. The viewer must move through the installation in order to see it in its entirety, yet each movement reveals new information, causing constant reevaluation of the experience. By heightening awareness of the inconsistency of perception, Gerber simultaneously probes viewers' assumptions about beauty, nature, perfection, and ultimately, art.

Art at the Edge: Gaylen Gerber was organized by the High Museum of Art. Generous support has been provided by Philip A. and Edith G. Rhodes.
