Caracois is a space for exploring alternative forms within contemporary art. They pursue and experiment with new approaches to exhibitions, projects, talks, discussions, and performances that break away from conventional frameworks. Their focus is not only on forms that are easily recognized as “art,” but also on those that resist easy categorization—forms that may not immediately appear to be art, yet can activate thought precisely through the act of being perceived as such. They aim to investigate and share the kinds of perspectives that emerge from this tension, while also questioning the very necessity of defining such practices as “art.”

By engaging with people from diverse backgrounds and avoiding the confines of established norms, they seek to cultivate and embody what a truly alternative form of art can be.
