In the city, dusk wraps around buildings,
blue,
unnatural velvet
A cloak, heavy particles
the tarmac and the concrete emit heat at night Freshness doesn't come.
The siren flashes its red eye on all it passes, Indiscriminate

Sitting in the laundromat when the streets are empty 24 hours but I feel no rush to leave
The drumming of the washing machines.
The pupil adjusts to the dark like a lens changing focus Stretch the ligament
On the rain drop on the window then back to what lies in the distance.
A steeple,
the ruin of a Greek wall crumbling Cutting the cliff face in two
The stones that have fallen for more than three millennia
Bruno Schulz The Street of Crocodiles
Powdery sun, soft clouds Sans soleil
My hand is my own but it is so far from me, at the end of my arm, my eye is unnatural or is it my feeling so distant All is hard covered in soft air
The fuzz of a peach and its wooden stone
