Have you got the time?

Rosemary Mayer's Temporary Monuments (Spring)

Rosemary Mayer

24/05/'25-21/06/'25

Opening hours: Fridays and Saturdays 1-5 pm/by appointment

From 1977 to 1982, Rosemary Mayer developed a series of works that she called "Temporary Monuments," which involved various fugitive materials and ephemeral constructions such as balloons, tents, and snow figures. These installations marked the seasons and drew attention to the passage of time; some were dedicated to friends, family, or historical figures. While their duration was limited—whether to the time it took the balloon to deflate, or snow to melt, or the moon to rise and set—these works are remembered and experienced today in the numerous photographs, drawings, flyers, posters, and artist books through which Mayer documented them.

In a drawing made in 1982, which marked the end of this body of work, Mayer posed a series of questions directly to the viewer, including "Have you got the time?" and "Can you stay up late?" Over the years that she worked on the Temporary Monuments and related projects, she grew to see the public as fellow participants. There is an openness and generosity to many of these works, summed up in another phrase on the same drawing: "Anyone can make one." Like her balloons and Ghosts which depended on points of contact to anchor and support themselves, Rosemary Mayer acknowledged the importance of the friends, family, collaborators, and historical precursors which made her work possible, and asked the viewers, both of her own time and ours, to lend their attention to these brief passing moments, flowers, and seasons.

Have you got the time? Rosemary Mayer's Temporary Monuments (Spring) is an experimental and iterative exhibition developed by the Estate of Rosemary Mayer in collaboration with Darling Green. The exhibition consists of sketches, ephemera, and documentation that travel in one box, expanding access to Mayer's work for smaller spaces. Reflecting on the work's connection to time, each exhibition is loosely curated by the season in which it takes place. The Spring presentation at Manifold Books is the first of this new series and the first exhibition of Rosemary Mayer's work in the Netherlands.

About Manifold Books:
