Exemplifying The Brio's methodology of collage assemblage and creative creolization,

UAP: Unidentified (Ab)original Phenomenon 2024 is an ambitious new commission that takes the form of an Australian gothic guardian angel. Artist collaborator Lévi McLean has written about the motivation of the piece as follows:

'The archangel began as a kind of petrochemical effigy. Rupert had found two large shell petroleum signs that suggested the iconic wings of an Angel. Like many Brio artworks it has the quality of a chimera, a wild beast mixed with the human and vice versa, capturing this notion of duality, of human nature and the attempt to overcome or ascend.'

At the base of the sculpture, a plinth of old shell oil barrels, a large sculptural hand emerges, grasping the archangel as if to bring it down into the depths! The elongated byzantine fingers coil around the archangel's feet like a vengeful full serpent. In the industrial heaviness of this exhibition these barrels are like the tunnel of a mine, which is not incidental.

The head of this chimera was completed with the bust of a sawn up plastic kangaroo, that has been crowned with the petrified horns of a feral deer. It is both of this place and foreign to it... A lot of these materials were found over the years by the Brio chief facilitator, each marked with their own material and social histories.'

Aligned with the industrial scale of a turbine hall and mining headframe, Gallery One hosts a major new scenographic assemblage of works, reflecting raw materiality of the now decommissioned Warrego mine on the outskirts of Tennant Creek on Warumungu Country. Warrego is now mined by The Brio for their own resources and source material. Incorporating significant early, recent and new works that share and celebrate culture, harness the power and strength of collaboration, and highlight a powerful critique on invasion, colonial extraction, capitalism, and the subsequent social, cultural and political complexities and negotiations that stem from this.

After encountering the towering guardian angel, UAP: Unidentified Aboriginal Phenomenon 2024, at the exhibition threshold, the gallery entrance is framed by two significant artworks by Brio members and cultural advisors Jimmy Frank Jupurrula and Joseph Williams Jungarayi.

Here, ancient mythologies and ancestors past and present converge with technologically driven futures while simultaneously drawing focus on the law of the land conveyed through a series of collaborative works and found objects that outline protocols while providing insight into the dynamic and diverse cultural contexts of Tennant Creek.

Kunari 2024 (which translates as lightening dreaming) represents a 'Black Zeus' figure to speak about customary Aboriginal law and resilience. The large concrete arm has been salvaged from a pop-cultural relic, originally attached to a large sculpture of The Hulk, and now transformed, acts as a spear thrower. Frank explains:

'I hand carved the spear from Mulga wood and see Kunari as representing cultural protocol through the idea of lightening and law. As a cultural leader the sculpture reflects my engagement and work in politics, cultural protocol and law.'

A horizon of works reference personal and ancestral connections, interweaving social and cultural perspectives related to place. At the centre of the room is a configuration of mud bricks, and a celestial orb connecting sky to earth, from which a soundscape by Brio collaborator Eleanor Jawurlngali Dixon emanates.

The mud bricks have been fabricated by Jimmy Frank Jupurrula, with earth and spinifex resin sourced from his ancestral Country at Phillip Creek. The production of these bricks relates to Jimmy Frank's leadership with Wilya Janta, an innovative Aboriginal not-for-profit cultural consultancy that promotes community agency in the design and construction of housing in Indigenous communities.

Eleanor Jawurlngali Dixon is a Mudburra and Garrawa woman from Marlinja in the Northern Territory, a small community roughly halfway between Mparntwe/Alice Springs and Garramilla/Darwin. Dixon is foremost a singer and musician, known for ethereal vocals through songs in Aboriginal languages and English which blend traditional and contemporary influences. With family and kinship connections to The Brio, Dixon's soundscape, entitled Cosmic Mother 2024, brings her ethereal voice and elemental sonic layering to create a spacious, expansive and futuristic soundscape. As Dixon explains:

In the midst of darkness and uncertainty, Cosmic Mother serves as a beacon of resistance, illuminating the path forward. It serves as a testament to human creativity and resilience, providing solace and inspiration in times of turmoil.

In 2016, prior to the establishment of Tennant Creek Brio, a men's art therapy program was initiated by Rupert Betheras, Fabian Brown Tjpaljarri and Joseph Williams Jungarayi through Anyinginyi Health Aboriginal Corporation's Stronger Families Men's Centre in Tennant Creek. Tennant Creek Brio grew out of this program and has since been practicing as an independent art collective, with a close association to Nyinkka Nyunyu Art & Culture Centre, Tennant Creek.

This gallery is informed by The Brio collective's studio in an industrial yard on the outskirts of Tennant Creek, a contemporary extension of the jangkai, or men's space. The Brio's studio serves as a place in which art, life and experimentation freely mix, as well as a space for collaboration, gathering amongst friends, and keeping culture strong.
