EPOCH presents four artists from different generations and milieus whose practices constantly ask us to re-view and re-think what is in plain sight. Their works call for a reexamination of the purpose of creative energy and impulses, something essential for the art that lasts.

With deft handling by Sopheap Pich, Gary Ross Pastrana, Shinro Ohtake, and Sunaryo, ordinary everyday things—magazine pages, bamboo slats, rope—become recontextualised and reenergised.

Like many contemporary artists of this day, they all work on a variety and diversity of materials and media. Yet, despite coming from a wide range of "whats" and "wheres," the art of each one returns to the central question of "why?" This is an exhibition about the making of art in this age.

Sopheap Pich (b. 1971, Cambodia), trained as a painter at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago, where he received his MFA in 1999. Perhaps best known for his sculptural bamboo-and-rattan work—the two in this show are fine examples—his art confronts the idea of frames and layers: two very painterly challenges.

With Untitled (Floors and Walk), he brings up that interest in rethinking of space and materials. His grid is literally that, made of wire, rattan and bamboo, but then Pich employs beeswax, burlap and natural resin to create a more complicated story. He showed similar works in 2012 at documenta(13) in Kassel, Germany.

The youngest of the group, Gary Ross Pastrana (b. 1977, Philippines) is a conceptual artist and a curator, an influential voice in Manila's lively contemporary scene. Most lauded for his installations and objects, he presents the two together with this new work. For many years, collaging has formed an important part of his practice, as an exploration in the potential of composition and as a daily On Kawarian gesture.

He takes print materials and reorganises the slivers into forms that are at once from the future and in dialog with a distant past: old magazine pages, shots of pure color and geometry. He aims to make a collage every day. Here, he has presented them as ephemeral and yet deliberate, on structures that unframe them.

Similarly, but not quite, Shinro Ohtake (b. 1955, Japan) reimagines pages from books, mass-market publications and other readymades into vivid forms and visual textures. Many remember his obsessively produced and thoroughly immersive scrapbooks of collages as a highlight of the the 2013 Venice Biennale. The multi-hyphenated artist, who is an accomplished painter and graphic designer, distils the sensations into works that are uniquely in his own distinct voice.

Writing about his masterplan for Venice 2013, curator Massimiliano Gioni explained that the "Encyclopedic Palace" comes from an unrealised 1955 idea of a museum of human knowledge and innovation. Gioni wrote: "Today, as we grapple with a flood of information, such attempts to structure knowledge into all-inclusive systems seem even more necessary and even more desperate." He intended the exhibition to offer "a reflection on the ways in which images have been used to organize knowledge and shape our experience of the world."

Ohtake has been making collages since around 1977. Each is a memory, a necessary response to a moment, a hope. The work in this show, made between 2007 and 2011, stand out as specimens of his mastery of the form. When bodyparts peep out from the striations, they appear to underscore the presence of human will in a world of pixels and the automation of the printing machine.

Finally, the most senior artist in the exhibition, Sunaryo (b. 1943, Indonesia) is represented with a large collage on canvas. A new piece, the venerated artist and educator has fashioned an earthy composition that suggests a landscape-dreamscape, an abstraction and a fascination with the ingredients of art.

With a color palette that brings to mind the stones and foliage around many of his public sculptures, and even his magical rock garden in the hills of his Bandung hometown, like Sunaryo does best, he connects with the elements and the fundamentals of his world and his art.

All the pieces in this exhibition were hand-built out of each artist's experiences, surroundings and toils. They not only capture their time, but also in a manner, inquire about what might come next.

They have brought layers of materials and thought-processes, resulting in fresh forms and new perspectives. Although varying approaches are employed, the works come together in a dynamism that throws open questions about the contemporary, where it might fit in a larger history and indeed why art matters in 2018.

We live in an epoch where the meaningful art of the present emerges from a plurality of influences and directions, to challenge conventional ways of seeing and doing. Coming out of some of the most engaging and self-aware artistic practices in Japan, Cambodia, the Philippines and Indonesia, the works invite a conversation on the value of modernity, the present, and the necessity of making sense of it all.

The artists in this exhibition see the world for what it is, around them, and consider its possibilities. We need art today because as human beings we need to feel and sometimes let the imagination take flight.

GARY-ROSS PASTRANA

Gary-Ross Pastrana's practice has been one of the most persistent in terms of investigating the real relationship between ideas and objects. His conceptual pieces, although loaded with poetic intensity, remain unobtrusively subtle and even almost quaint in their appearance. Coiled photographs, woven tales from found pictures in the internet, sawed off parts of a boat shipped to another country, his shirt tied into a pole to commensurate a flag, these are the slightest of turns Gary-Ross has his objects make to create a new text within.

Born in 1977 in Manila, he received his Bachelors degree in Painting from the University of the Philippines where he was awarded the Dominador Castaneda Award for Best Thesis. He has gained considerable experience and exposure within the region, with residency programs in Bandung, Kyoto and Bangkok and most recently at the Center for Contemporary Art, Singapore. Pastrana is a recipient of the CCP Thirteen Artists Award in 2006. He has shown at the Singapore Art Museum, Metropolitan Museum of the Philippines, the Jorge B. Vargas Museum and was part of the 2012 New Museum Triennale and 2008 Busan Biennale. In 2004, he co-founded Future Prospects art space and has since continually organized exhibitions in Manila and abroad.

SOPHEAP

PICH

Sopheap Pich is widely considered to be Cambodia's most internationally prominent contemporary artist. Born in Battambang, Cambodia, in 1971, he moved with his family to the United States in 1984. After receiving his BFA (University of Massachusetts at Amherst, 1995) and MFA (The School of the Art Institute of Chicago, 1999), he returned to Cambodia in 2002, where he began working with local materials – bamboo, rattan, burlap, beeswax and earth pigments gathered from around Cambodia – to make sculptures inspired by bodily organs, vegetal forms, and abstract geometric structures. Pich's childhood experiences during the genocidal conditions of late 1970s Cambodia had a lasting impact on his work, informing its themes of time, memory, and the body. His sculptures stand out for their subtlety and power, combining refinement of form with a visceral, emotive force.

SUNARYO

Born in Banyumas, Central Java, Indonesia in 1943, Sunaryo received his initial art study in sculpture at the ITB (Bandung Institute of Technology). He graduated in 1969. In 1975, he went to Carrara, Italy to study marble sculpting. An accomplished artist, Sunaryo is known for his monumental sculpture such as the Monumen Perjuangan Rakyat Jawa Barat (MONPERA), Bandung and the Jenderal Sudirman Statue, Jakarta, and the latest one being “Bilah Nusantara”, cauldron for Asian Games 2018 which located in front of the main stadium of Gelora Bung Karno. Besides paintings, he is also known for his paintings, installations, and prints. Five of his print works were included in The Contemporary Prints of the World (1989) alongside internationally renowned artists like Joan Miro and Paul Klee.

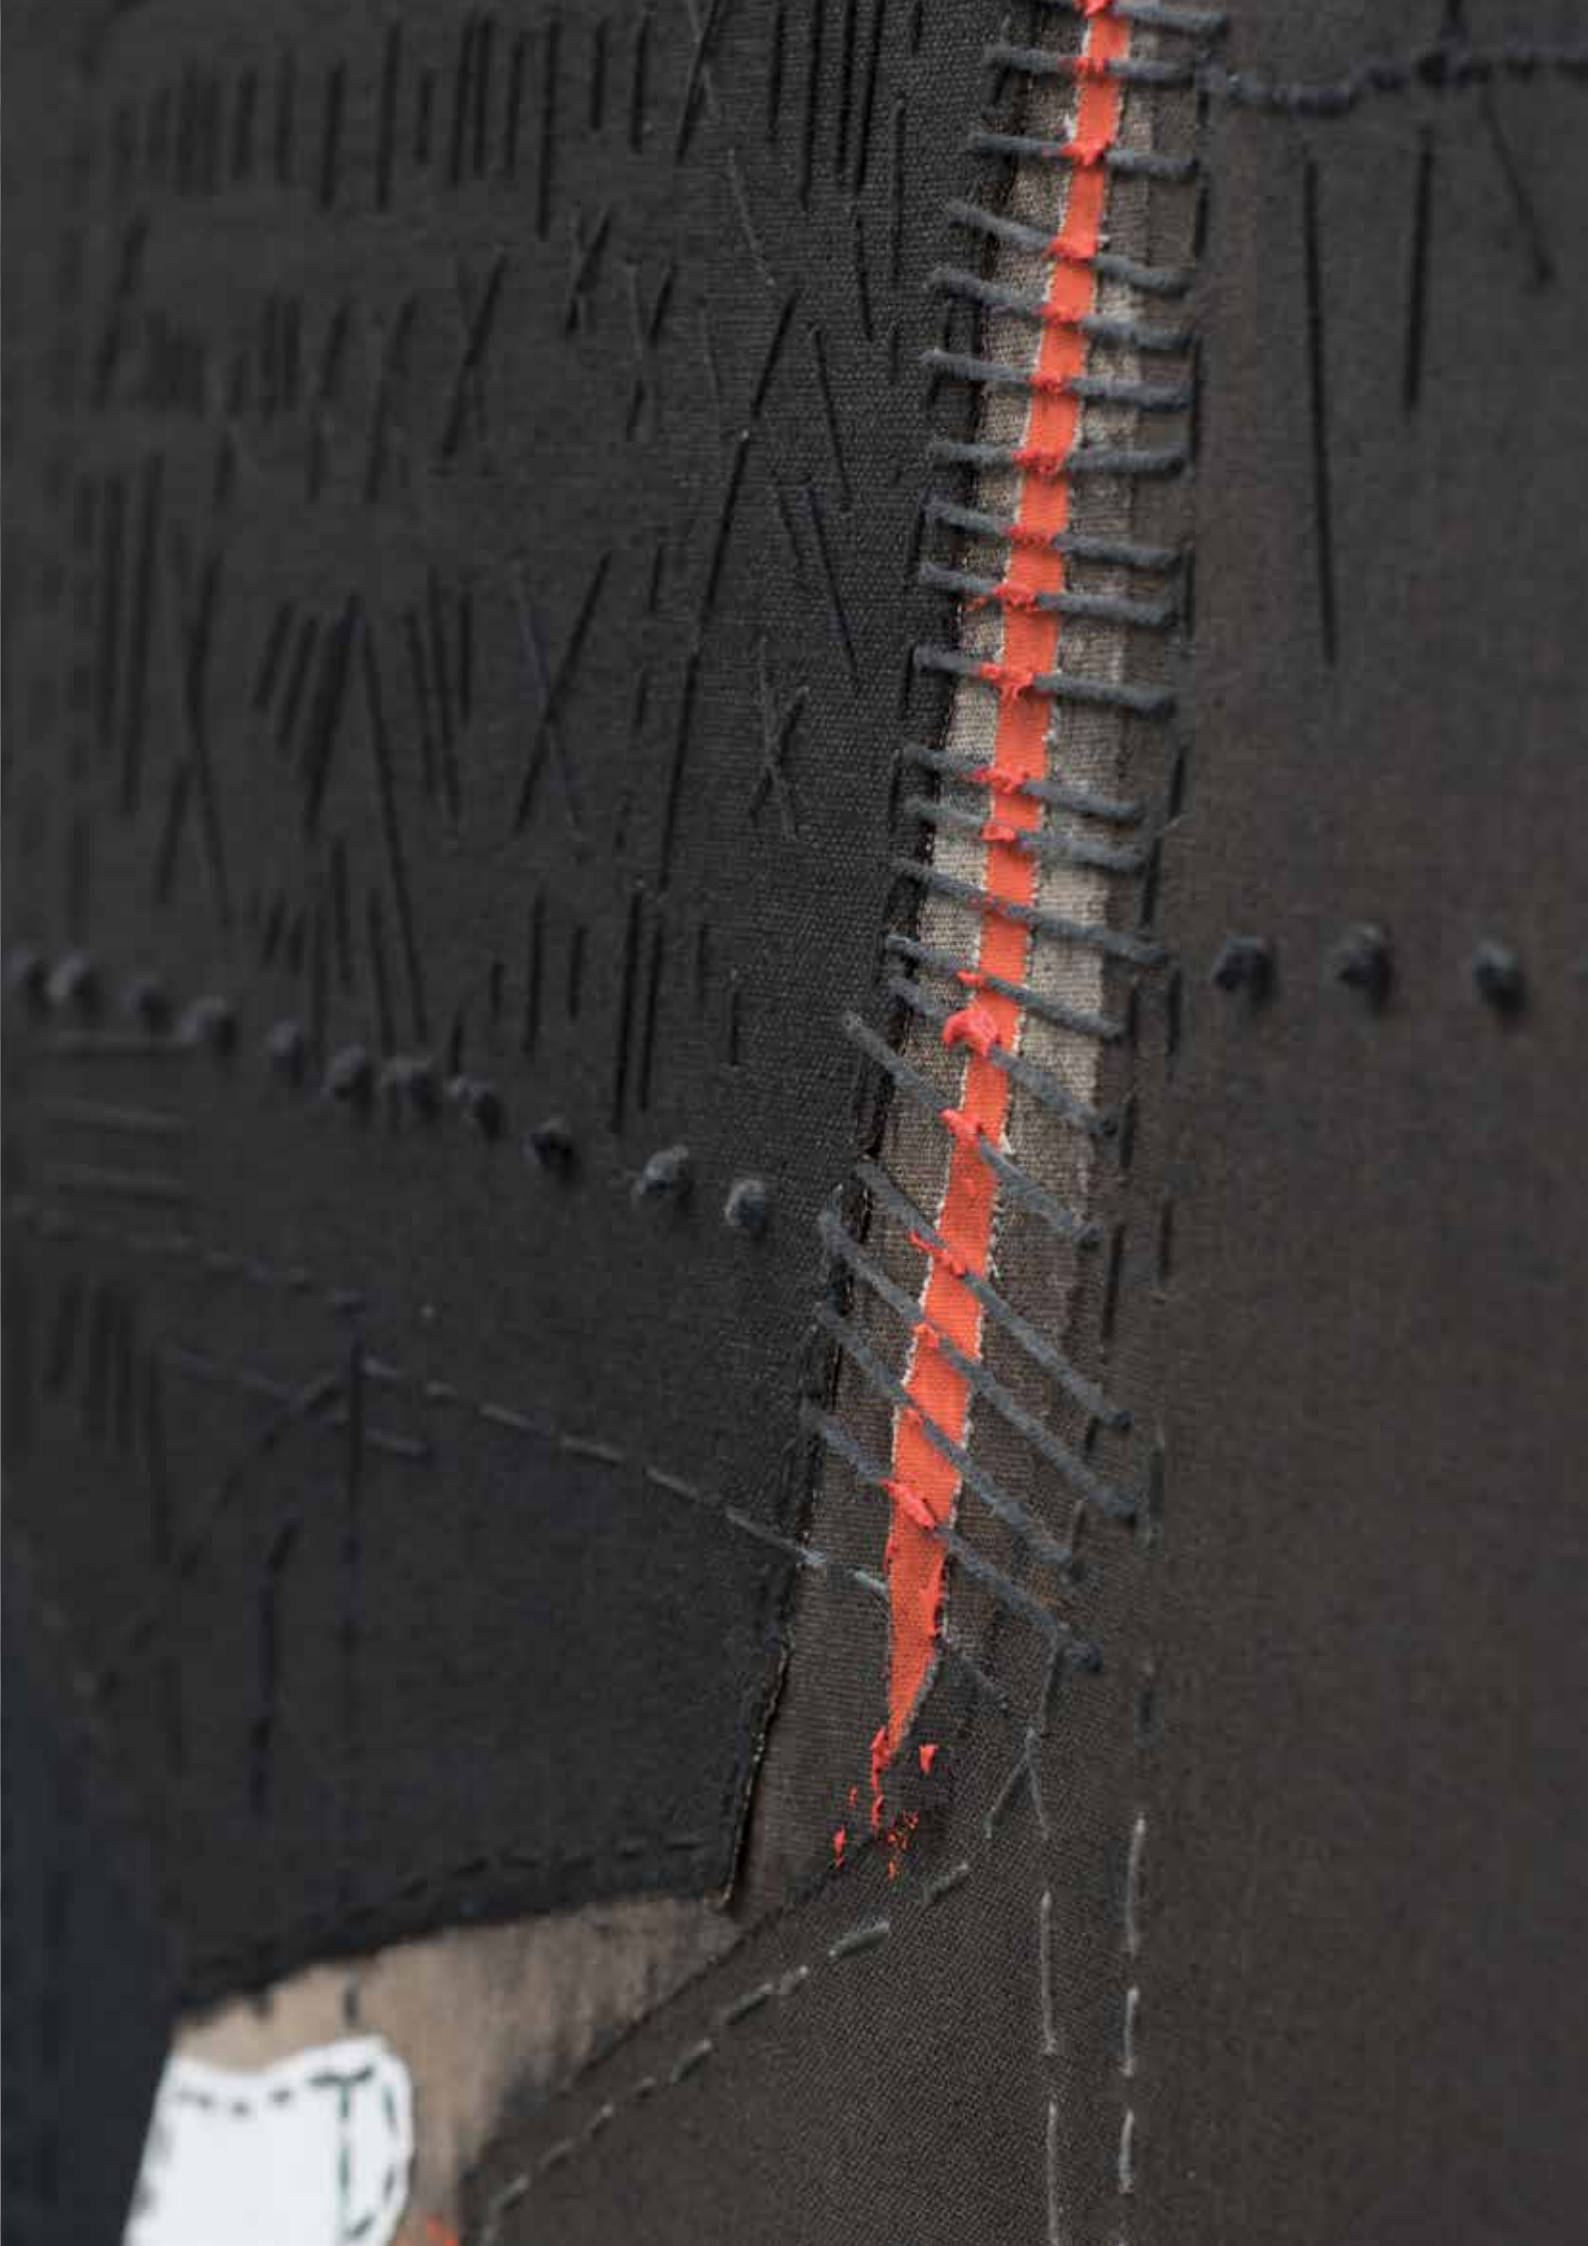

Throughout his artistic career, Sunaryo received many prestigious awards in Indonesia and abroad, such as Honorable Mention in Philip Morris ASEAN Art Award (1995) and One of Five Best Paintings, Indonesian Art Award (1994). His participation in many major art exhibitions at home and overseas, and together with the numerous public commissions that he won, has secured his reputation as being one of Indonesia's most eminent artists. The multi-talented artist lives and works in Bandung, Indonesia, and is the founder of Selasar Sunaryo Art Space, a leading not-for-profit art organization in Bandung. In 2015, Sunaryo also founded Wot Batu, an installation work in a form of ±2000 sqm stone garden. Consisting 135+1 stones which are conceptually and harmoniously planted and laid out in it.

Sunaryo's concerns in art and culture throughout his life granted him several awards such as the Akademi Jakarta Award, The Lifetime Achievement from Art Stage Jakarta and Jogja Biennale in 2017, and The Chevalier dans l'ordre des Arts et Lettres from the French Cultural Ministry.
