Access Info

Galerie Max Mayer is located on the ground floor. Please ring the bell (or use your phone to call the gallery) for ramp access through the building to the 2nd back yard.

Some works in this exhibition may be physically touched; see gallery for details.

The platform (6) may be touched + traversed; a ramp to the platform is available upon request.

Sound work in this exhibition is installed with haptic vibrations and two channel open captions.

Image descriptions for all works in this exhibition are provided below.

Image Description

0 [Two flatscreen monitors, rotated and stood vertically on the floor, meet in an open corner against two walls. Each screen is black with open captions in white text at its bottom. The text of each runs in parallel to the other along the corner's seam.]

1 [A long exposure solargraph tracks the sun in the sky over the course of two months. The faded negative photo paper shows a street view with city buildings that block all but a sliver of the sun's path.]

3 [Two analog pocket watches with embedded stop watches replace the earpiece speakers on a 1990s headphone strap. One clock's face is covered by a yellowed transparent cover while the other clock's cover is missing. The clock hands are removed from both watches.]

4 [An open rectilinear wood frame encases soft foam and leans against a wall. Its slow entropic geometries form as its contents spill on the back wall to find support.]

5 [In a dimly lit room, an open demonstration based sculpture images otherwise invisible heat waves. On the left a blurry blue projected circle on a black wall hosts the shadow of a soldering iron; live motion wavy curls of heat fall from its shaft. On the right, two steel tables hold the soldering iron as a physical object for which no image of heat is visible; various instruments like mirrors, lights and a blade sit atop the tables.]

6 [In the corner of a dimly lit room, a collapsible modular staging platform hosts acoustic foam wedge panels and two corner bass traps laid down horizontally atop its surface.]
