Coppypasta

January 31 - March 14, 2026

Opening reception: Saturday January 31, 3-6pm

COOPER COLE is pleased to announce Coppypasta, the fourth solo exhibition by Jesse Harris at the gallery.

1. Winter, Ella. Don't you know you can't go home again?
The Yale Book of Quotations. New Haven, Connecticut: Yale University Press, p. 832
2. Wolfe, Thomas. 1940. You Can't Go Home Again.
First edition. New York: Harper & Brothers.

Returning to Toronto within his memory, Jesse Harris (b. 1981) recalls the formative and irreverent sentiment within a downtown shopping plaza Village by the Grange where he once originally discovered it at ...it store! circa 1989-90.

At a recent online auction, Harris purchased the collection (of purchases) and surviving works of Toronto Artist Beth S, age fifteen. Beth S assembled hundreds of small items of ephemera from ...it store! and perhaps, as mythology, she even worked there. She included original artworks in their display, as if to personalize her collection and position it in totality. Totally participant in parody of trendy cliches of the period, her work is now regarded as prophecy.

With Coppypasta, Jesse Harris exhibits contemporary works of iconoclasm. Using this ephemera directly, he recollects The Last Supper (Leonardo) with whitewashed memory ware sculpture as profane articles of faith.

A simple table is composed as a still life with dozens of wine and liquor bottles. The glass containers have been stoned with mortar and painted in oil. Any labeling has been obscured in a Cubist reduction to vessel form and symbol. Each bottle carries a mini message, a conversational quip, a motto or truism found on a badge from the collection of Toronto artist Beth S, age fifteen (c. 1989-90).

Fast, cheap and easy messaging is refashioned as a placeholder. A •bullet point loaded artwork as an empty flask or fiasco after The Last Supper Party.

In this exhibition, Jesse Harris debuts a series of new work called DTFs. The artist has created repeated imagery to mimic wallpaper or packaging or giftwrap or flash. Gangsheets of decals printed on film recall his past work in commercial sign making both in production and material language. The graphics refer to fruit forbidden: ads, emoji, logos, ethos, mascots, memes. An iron-on irony diary of decalcomania, designs so transferred to pottery are now framed as a window and put up as a poster. Placement within the gallery of Harris' DTFs matches with the one-point-perspectival fresco of Leonardo.

Coppypasta also features miniature pieces from the artist's personal archive including global Telephone Calling Cards illustrated by Leonardo da Vinci. Also novelty Credit Cards and void Cheques collected by both Jesse Harris and Toronto artist Beth S, age fifteen (c. 1989-90).

Various small paintings of ~~soup~~ beer cans feed the floor. Breadcrumb followers sweep and swipe and search results. Wet-washed treasured message at sea glass. Knick knack, bric-a-brac, a rockhound bleached beach-comb.

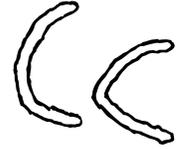

- Jesse Harris, 2026

LOL ok yes this is extremely art-world coded, so let's translate it into normal-human:

Big picture: what is this show about?

It's about nostalgia, consumer junk, memes before memes, and how cheap mass culture becomes "holy" or meaningful over time – kind of like turning trash + teen culture into religious icons.

Also about not being able to go back to your childhood, even when you literally return to the place.

Step-by-step, in plain English

1. “You can’t go home again”

He starts by quoting that famous idea:

👉 you can’t really go back to your past, even if you go to the same place.

He went back to Toronto and remembered this goofy mall store he loved as a kid in the late 80s / early 90s.

So:

this show is about revisiting childhood through objects, but realizing it’s not the same anymore.

2. Who is Beth S, age fifteen?

At an auction, the artist bought a huge collection made by a 15-year-old girl in 1989–90 who collected:

- * little store trinkets
- * badges
- * random cheap stuff
- * plus her own drawings mixed in

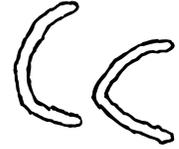

She treated her collection like it was a whole art installation.

At the time it was just teen + trend + parody...

but now, looking back, it feels weirdly ahead of its time, like early meme culture or aesthetic culture.

So he’s kind of saying:

👉 this teenager accidentally predicted internet culture and aesthetic obsession.

3. The Last Supper but make it mall trash

He uses her old stuff and turns it into art that references The Last Supper (like religious painting vibes).

He makes:

- * a table
- * with lots of wine and liquor bottles
- * but he covers them with plaster and paint so they look like abstract shapes

So instead of holy cups and bread, it's empty bottles and consumer junk.

Basically:

👉 modern “faith” = brands, trends, slogans, vibes

4. The tiny messages on the bottles

Each bottle has a tiny slogan from the teen girl's badge collection:

- * little jokes
- * mottos
- * cute phrases

He's saying these fast, cheap messages are like:

- * empty motivational quotes
- * social media captions
- * things that sound deep but aren't

So the bottles become symbols of:

> “we partied, we consumed, now it's empty”

Hence the “empty flask after the Last Supper party” line.

Savage but kinda funny.

5. What are the DTFs (lol yes that acronym)

These are sheets of repeated sticker images – like:

- * wrapping paper
- * packaging
- * wallpaper
- * merch graphics

They include:

- * ads
- * emojis
- * logos
- * mascots
- * memes

He prints them like mass production, then transfers them onto pottery, frames them, hangs them like paintings.

So he's turning commercial junk visuals into gallery art, while also mocking how fake-deep that is.

And he hangs them in the same layout as the Last Supper painting, again mixing:

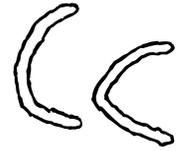

👉 religion + branding + decoration

6. Calling cards, fake credit cards, soup cans on the floor

He also shows:

- * old phone cards
- * novelty credit cards
- * fake checks
- * soup / beer can paintings scattered on the floor

All stuff about:

- * money
- * communication
- * consumption
- * searching / scrolling (“breadcrumb followers sweep and swipe and search results” = phone behavior)

So it’s basically saying:

👉 we worship convenience, brands, and endless searching instead of meaning

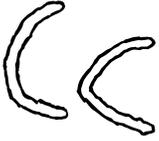

Ultra-simple version

If I had to explain this in one breath:

> The artist went back to things from his childhood and from a teenage girl’s old collection of mall junk and slogans, and he turned them into religious-looking art to show how modern culture treats brands, trends, and memes like sacred objects – while also admitting it’s kind of empty and sad but also funny and nostalgic.

If you want, I can also explain:

- * what “cospasta” means in this context
- * why he keeps referencing Leonardo
- * or what parts are genuinely smart vs just art-school word soup (because it’s definitely some of both 😊)
