The new sculptures can be deflated and shipped anywhere for cheap. The setup is very easy - I wouldn't even have to be there in most cases, you basically just plug them in and they inflate. I could customize or make new ones from scratch.

Finances are currently very precarious - my new free time is not profitable. I had to abandon several days of work on a product idea of expensive pillows made from scraps of dead-stock chintz (a very pricey polished floral cotton often used in high-end wall covering, drapes, upholstery, etc). I thought that some ambitious people would go for these remnants until I found out most of the fabric is sprayed with teflon, a cause of cancer - not a growth market.

The prototypes are in my room and look fantastic despite the risk. I'm looking for different opportunities now. -MLP
