Dear Heidi,

I share these remarks with Fred Wagemans, who handles my work and projects from a base in Holland.

The news photos of Prince Willem Alexander and Princess Maxima (from Argentina) with the Dutch Navy on display in New York City, with Hillary Clinton as well as Mayor Bloomberg, underscore the importance the US and Dutch give to asserting a new presence in South America

instead of Hugo Chavez and Castro, and somehow reconciling with native-American leader of Bolivia, Ivo Morales.

The Dutch have the dominant naval presence in the coastal waters of Venezuela.

They also share with France and Britain control of the Caribbean.

With Castro soon dead, but with Chavez flirting heavily with Russia, it comes time to make a new initiative in South America.

Maxima from Argentina can play a major role.

Important too, is that Prince Willem Alexander, who will become king, is primarily interested in water as a factor in history.

We organize our work by saltwater basins, and with energy systems based on waterplants and waterflows.

Heidi, you have been well-received by people of influence in both Chile and Argentina. You present a view of child development and the future which is grounded in native culture, e.g., the Maori culture of New Zealand, and you do this more for ecological than ethnographic reasons.

This can be a major counterpoint to the appeals of Chavez.

There are qualities in his appeals, but there is also a pronounced absence of ecological initiative, and there are disturbingly militaristic tones in his promulgation of classical music training for all, especially the poor.

In any case, a dialectic is needed.

I think your welcome through the EnviroSchools program in Chile, and now Argentina, should be made known to influential people in The Netherlands.

For example, one could find funding for translation of the EnviroSchools materials into Spanish.

This is confidential.

Peter

A skatepark near Unser Fritz, in a Kiez named Bismarck, of territory for another waterplant industry, with Saltwater Plants, in

Wellington Harbour and Bluecher Bay.

I will bring plans.

This is my correction of the historical record for NZ..

Falliser Bay is renamed, after Wellington's savior, Bluecher.

There are three half-pipe cones.

Rich in giant algae industrially.

A patron is required. Model: 3000 Euro.
Realization: 100,000 Euro.

The patron can earn money from sales of ERNEUERBAR hot drinks, cold drinks or Wurst.
