

ST. KINDELEIN

TANNER AT ST. KINDELEIN 14.11—30.11.2025

with JOHANNES KUCZERA, LULU LEIKA, NICOLAI OLESEN, MILLE QVIST and LENNART MINK WEBER

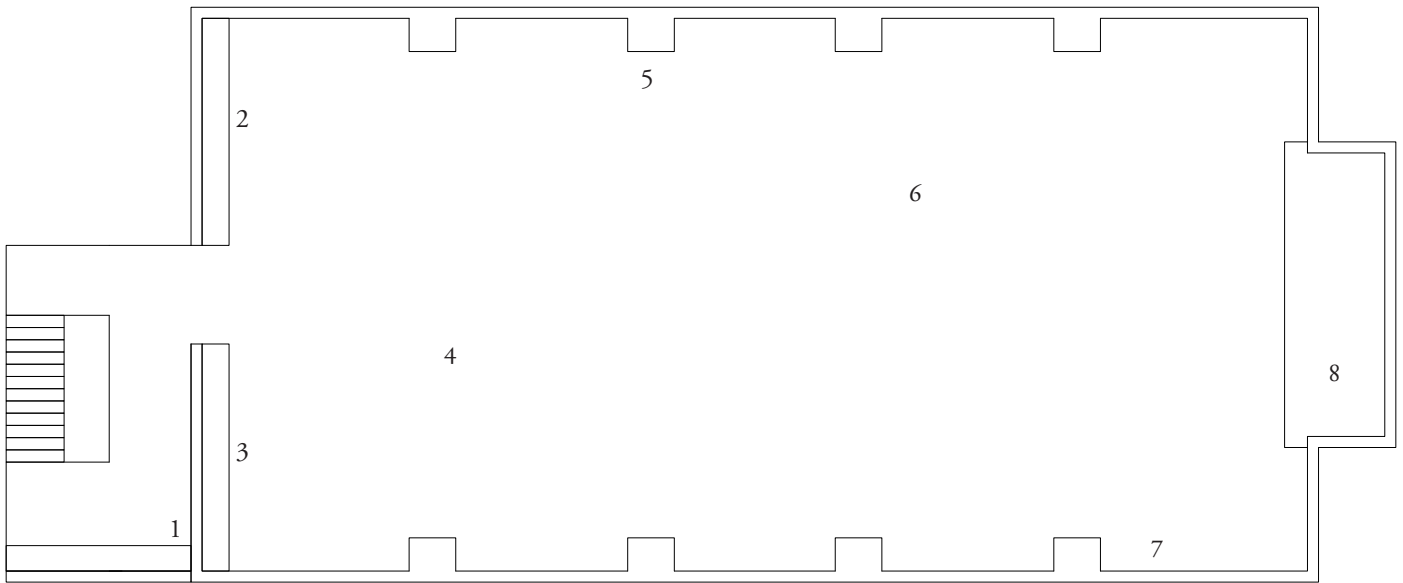

The furnishings of life came from grandmother's living room, and from the dirt, and also from the naivete that grew like sunflowers seeds under the dining room table where you used to hide under the cloth. The cloth was embroidered and it had red stains from late evenings when the people above, the people outside, the folks from the other side of the table had had a good time or raised their voices at each other and. And you had grass stains from pulling the potatoes in the dirt outside.

The cloth came a cover of unknowledge. It kept out the noise through which the nonsense took form; the lessons dressing a kid like you in a reality like theirs. You watered and you waited for a tree and you never wore that which she had laid out on the bed for you.

When the curtain no longer cared to harbour a child was when you were not anymore. The outside side had become your side. You were inside learning how to live with the shapes, and the forms, and also their furniture so hefty and large and so there that they disguised reality into rules. You had learnt; Where not to step, and where not to go, and what not to do, and also who not to see and from that knowledge you could not hide. You were not one of the immune. But once you realised the words as texture, and the furnishings as form, and also the rules as reality was when you were ready to refurnish the room.

LULU LEIKA

*Trying to remember the song but only got the melody
in mind and there are all these gaps not empty gaps
but with missing lyrics and I end up only singing something like this: ...and in the time right now...
and they said... and... so it will... yeah...*
