

Swiss Institute of Design

Issue No. 3—September 2012

John M Armleder—Selected Furniture Sculptures

---

---

Swiss Institute of Design

ISSN 2167-4965

$5.00

9 772167 496002

03 >

M L E D E R

John M Armleder (Swiss, b. 1948) studied at the Academy of Fine Arts Geneva (1966–1967). Together with Patrick Lucchini and Claude Rychner, he founded the Suisse Ecart group in 1969, which was close to Fluxus. The exhibition John M Armleder Selected Furniture Sculptures 1979–2012 is curated by Swiss Institute Director Gianni Jetzer in close collaboration with the artist. It consists of both historical and new works, as well as two restitutions of historical pieces reported as missing. Several works in the exhibition were initially produced in the 1980s on the occasion of Armleder's solo shows at John Gibson Gallery, 568 Broadway, in New York's SoHo. The presentation of these pieces in SoHo at Swiss Institute serves to trace and continue the artist's history.

J O I N M A R

B O B

On John Armleder's Furniture Showroom
(A Misguided Tour)
Bob Nickas

Sculpture was once famously defined as what you bump into when you step back to look at a painting. This almost never happens with John Armleder. Beginning with 7 June 1980, designated as FS1, 1979, he introduced his concept of Furniture Sculpture more than thirty years ago. In these works, everyday objects such as chairs, tables, cabinets, and lights, but also musical instruments, mirrors, and even surfboards, accompany canvases or are painted upon themselves. There are precedents, to be sure, most notably the combines of Rauschenberg, the domestic sculpture of Oldenburg and Artschwager (and the glories of formica), as well as the inescapable readymades of Duchamp. There are any number of particular examples which might be useful in terms of connecting the dots between artists and ideas, setting the stage for the Furniture Sculpture, so to speak, never forgetting that Armleder is very much a master of staging. But in terms of opening up to a larger view, one must look to the painted elements to more fully grasp the radicality of the artist's gesture,

Untitled (FS85a), 1985
Exhibition "Provenade"
Parc Lullin
Centre d'art Contemporain, Genève

revealing the canny mind at work here, and above all his intention to interweave art and life, originality and appropriation, folly and fidelity, abstraction and representation, the realms of the real and the unreal.

And what has been painted? Dots, circles, stripes, checkerboards, monochromes, seemingly random marks and pours of paint. In terms of the language that was popular at the time the Furniture Sculpture began taking on greater visibility in the mid-'80s, these signs of painting were themselves readymade. Armleder's paintings were as instantly recognizable to us as the vernacular objects with which they had been paired. But when combined with an armchair or flanked by a pair of conga drums [FS143, 1987], geometric or gestural abstractions would partake of a new reality. Not only would paintings and vernacular objects simultaneously ground and liberate one another, they would perform, and often comically. Why, for example, was a painting immersed in a fish tank? [FS166, 1987] Why had a chair been hung thirty feet above the ground, from a tree trunk in the park? [FS85a, 1985] Armleder's gestures can be both absurd and direct, an artist for whom there has always been a reverence and an irreverence with regard to the act of painting. He didn't pull the rug out from under painting. The rug became the painting's support [FS30, 1982]. And the figure/ground relationship was established from the moment the viewer walked into the room and gazed down upon a composition to which he or she would momentarily participate. Armleder's engagement with happenings and performance in the '60s and '70s should not be underestimated, for their insistence on the reciprocal nature of an audience/performer situation, as well as for the animation of objects and instruments. In later years, his use of furniture, both painted and unadorned, set on the floor, tilted and balanced against the wall, or installed on the ceiling, would amplify their other reality as props, and for Armleder so too would painting function as such.

Armleder has never made a figurative painting, and yet the human form is always present in relation to the Furniture Sculpture. He has likewise never produced a representational painted scene, and has never had to. Four chrome stools with red vinyl cushions, placed in front of a blue monochrome hung low to the wall [FS196, 1988], represent a classic streamlined '60s diner as well as, or even more evocatively than a photo realist painting. This calls to mind one of the great strengths of this work: the power of suggestion, and the exchange between abstraction and narrative.

Untitled (FS196), 1988
 Courtesy Collection Bo Alveryd
 Vaumarcus, Switzerland

Environment, 1967
Geneva, Switzerland

In a museum, when one encounters a pair of large monochromes behind a bench messily heaped with children's clothes and two skateboards on the floor [FS237, 1990], one imagines that this could very well be a scene displaced from a collector's home. Painting, for Armleder, is also intimately related to design and decor, to presentation and display. His friend Olivier Mosset once joked that some artists make paintings that you can hang above the sofa, while John gives you the painting and the sofa. It's an amusing remark on the face of it, and certainly true, yet it also points to the fact that art is routinely subjected to the vicissitudes of daily life, to happy and unhappy coincidence. Coming from Fluxus, Armleder welcomes chance while at the same time he orchestrates the set of circumstances we embrace as art. When you encounter a pair of electric guitars hung on either side of an otherwise austere canvas you acknowledge the fact that Armleder intends not only to instrumentalize painting, but also the everyday. There are other artists who "sidelined" into furniture production, Donald Judd most notably, extending their esthetic from sculptural to functional realms, meaning they want their desk to function as a desk. John Armleder wants to repurpose and transform an object, meaning that he needs a desk to participate equally in a composition, to take its place within an arrangement, either harmoniously or anarchically. Simply put, this is the difference between a desk by an artist and Art.

John Armleder's Furniture Sculpture is the one aspect of his wide-ranging body of work which was given its own official designation. It appeared to dovetail neatly with the emergence of so-called Neo-Geo painting in the second half of the '80s, and the re-emergence of the readymade at around the same time. It was fortuitous, of course, but obscures the fact that Armleder is an artist who had been engaged with an intermingling of art and life since the mid-to-late '60s, and with geometric abstraction since the '70s. A hazy black-and-white photograph identified as Installation, 1967, has occasionally been reproduced in his catalogs. In it, we see a pair of tufted French boudoir chairs illuminated by a floor lamp in a darkened room, with a framed painting dimly visible in the background. Evocative of a Proustian film noir, it precedes by more than twenty years a trio of similar chairs, presented on a low platform, that constitute FS230, 1989. Another occasionally reproduced image which is captioned “Assemblage, Prison St.-Antonie, Geneva, 1968,” offers a glimpse of a proto-Furniture Sculpture. Here, we see a table upended on a laundry line, as if held in mid-air by an open umbrella and a broom. Improvised while the artist was briefly held, and on friendly terms, as a conscientious objector for refusing his obligatory military service, the piece was recreated in 1992 for the exhibition, “1968,” at Le Consortium in Dijon, France, underscoring its whimsical/political dimension.

Two years prior to the debut of his Furniture Sculpture, Armleder exhibited an animated tableaux of common objects which he titled, Here Comes My Face, 1977. An oscillating fan set on the floor turns in front of an upright mirror, while a bare lightbulb hung low

John Armleder, Assemblage, 1968
Gefängnis St. Antoine, Genf

from the ceiling sways back-and-forth in the breeze. While this may be as close to a self-portrait—at least rendered with objects—as the artist has ever come, we can clearly see that the Furniture Sculpture, a body of work that has been ongoing for more than thirty years now, regularly offers a glimpse of the man himself. Although John Armleder may neither surf [FS201, 1988] nor play the trombone [FS227, Seafoam, 1989], he has always maintained perfect poise and an elegantly incongruous balance. He walks into the room and one is met with a man meticulously dressed. Only after a moment do you realize that his tie is imprinted with puppies or skulls, and only when he turns to leave are you aware that his hair falls to his waist, although in a perfect braid. Unfailingly well-mannered, he is also possessed with a wry sense of humor and an incisive perception, gentlemanly and devilish in equal parts. If this also seems to describe the formally anarchic spirit of his Furniture Sculpture, it is certainly no coincidence. The man and his art are without doubt very well put together, a study in the equilibrium of poised and free-wheeling associations. And nowhere is this more evident than in his endlessly fascinating and mischievous work with Furniture and Sculpture.

Swiss Institute Contemporary Art
Issue No. 3, September 2012

Published in conjunction with the exhibition
"John M Armleder Selected Furniture Sculptures 1979–2012"
Curated by Gianni Jetzer

September 13 – October 28 2012

Editor: Gianni Jetzer
Editorial Associate: Piper Marshall
Author: Bob Nickas
Graphic Design: Li, Inc.
Printed in Italy

Swiss Institute Contemporary Art
18 Wooster Street
New York, NY 10013
(212) 925-2035
info@swissinstitute.net
www.swissinstitute.net

SI STAFF

Director: Gianni Jetzer
Deputy Director: Stephanie Krueger
Assistant Curator: Piper Marshall
Gallery Manager: Clément Delépine
Bookkeeper: Lisa Hamilton
Interns: Rael Nevenschwander, Hanna Yoo, Lisette Mury

SI BOARD

Chair: Fabienne P. Abrecht
Honorary Chairman: H.E. Ambassador François Barras
Consul General of Switzerland in New York
Secretary: Hans F. Kaeser
Treasurer: Daniel H. Sigg
Trustees: Francesco Bonami, Anne Keller, James McGivney
Dale E. Miller, Richard Phillips, Emma Reeves
Thomas Schneider, Susanne von Meiss, Daniel Wuersch, René Marty

ABOUT SWISS INSTITUTE

Swiss Institute, founded in 1986, is a non-profit contemporary arts space dedicated to enhancing dialogue between Switzerland, Europe, and the United States. Its innovative, cutting-edge exhibitions showcase works by international artists at 18 Wooster Street (between Canal and Grand Streets) in the heart of SoHo. Dedicated to continuing the vibrant tradition of contemporary art in downtown NYC and to challenging assumptions about national stereotypes, Swiss Institute provides visitors from around the world a unique, provocative experience, inviting exploration of contemporary art through ongoing exhibitions, lectures, screenings, special events, and educational programming.

THANK YOU

Patrick Li, Seth Zucker, Daniel Wagner, and Bettina Sorg.

Swiss Institute thanks LUMA Foundation, Fonds municipal d'art contemporain (FMAC) Genève, and The République et canton de Genève for their support for this exhibition.

Main sponsors include LUMA Foundation, Friends of Swiss Institute (FOSI), UBS, and Swiss Re.

Swiss Institute Issue No. 3 is made possible with the support of Fogal AG.

The logo for Fogal AG, featuring the word "fogal" in a stylized, lowercase, cursive script font.

FRONT COVER (EXTERIOR)

John Armleder with Furniture Sculpture in 1970–1980
Neue Galerie im Landesmuseum Joanneum, Graz, 1981
Photo courtesy the artist

ISSN 2167-4965

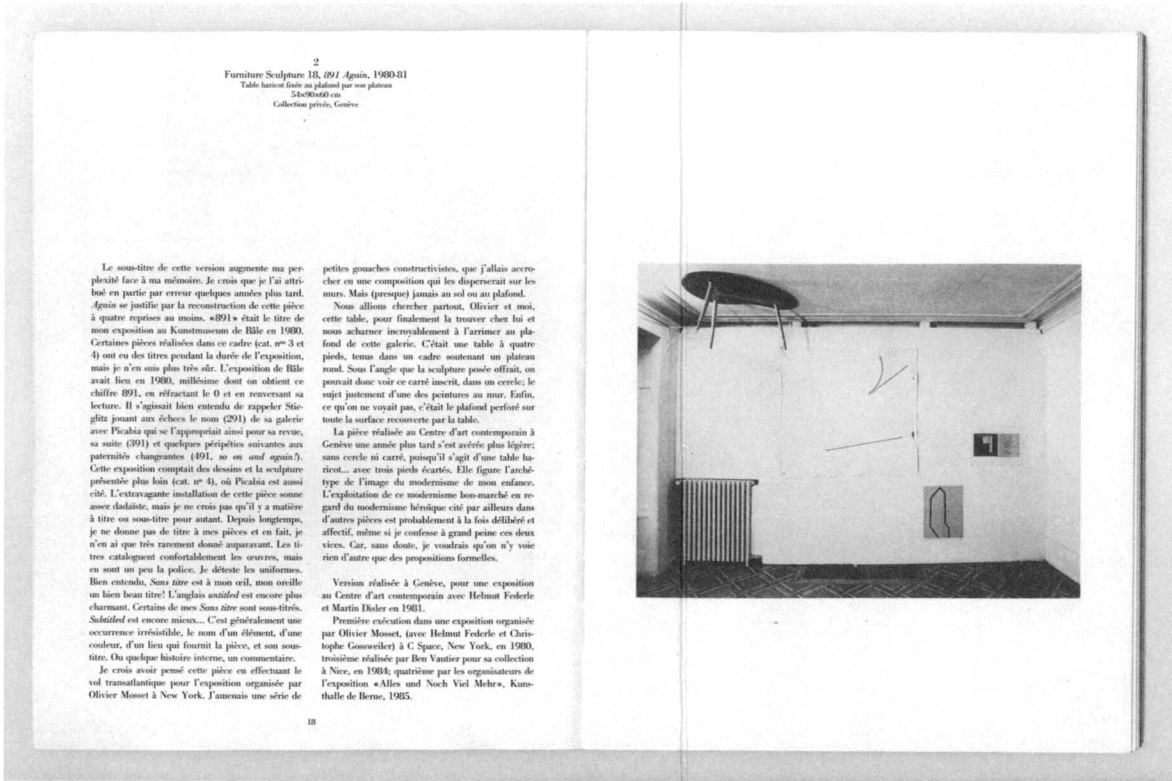

INTERIOR PAGES 46, 47
Reconstruct / Deconstruct
John Gibson, New York
1987

FRONT COVER
Reconstruct / Deconstruct
John Gibson, New York
1987

INTERIOR PAGES 6, 7
John M Armleder, Olivier Mosset
Städtische Galerie Regensburg,
Maison de la culture et de la communication
de Saint-Étienne,
Centre d'art contemporain Nevers
1986

FRONT COVER
John M Armleder, Olivier Mosset
Städtische Galerie Regensburg,
Maison de la culture et de la communication
de Saint-Étienne,
Centre d'art contemporain Nevers
1986

INTERIOR PAGES 18, 19
John M Armleder, Furniture Sculpture 1980-1990
Musée Rath, Genève
1990

FRONT COVER
John M Armleder, Furniture Sculpture 1980-1990
Musée Rath, Genève
1990

INTERIOR PAGES 16, 17
Sylvie Fleury, John M. Armleder
Kunsthalle Palazzo, Liestal
1994

FRONT COVER
Sylvie Fleury, John M. Armleder
Kunsthalle Palazzo, Liestal
1994

KODAK SAFETY FILM 8007

KODAK SAFETY FILM 8007

KODAK SAFETY FILM 8007

KODAK SAFETY FILM 8007

KODAK SAFETY FILM 8007

→ 4

→ 3

→ 2

→ 1

→ 8

→ 7

→ 6

→ 5

→ 12

→ 11

→ 10

→ 9

Art: John Armleder, Furniture Sculptures

NY TIMES 5/24/87

A painted grand piano, one of John Armleder's "furniture sculptures."

By ROBERTA SMITH

THE rage for furniture-as-sculpture continues apace in New York and the work of John Armleder, a Swiss artist who is one of the phenomenon's early proponents, confirms that it is not a purely American one. Mr. Armleder is known for combining old styles of abstraction with old styles of furniture, conjuring up effects that, in addition to being rather beautiful, are peculiarly neutral and tinged in equal amounts with a dandyish irony and a respect for the past.

In his fourth one-person show at the John Gibson Gallery, 568 Broadway, at Prince Street, Mr. Armleder exhibits works he calls "furniture sculptures." These continue to navigate the terrain between art and design, painting and the objects, with some changes that do not always work to the artist's advantage. The first piece we encounter has some of his old flavor: it combines a green upholstered chair of 1950's vintage with a green canvas that has true chrome light fixtures attached to its bottom edge. The canvas is hung so low that the chair overlaps it and we can compare the two shades of green fabric; the canvas makes the chair an esthetic object; the lamps in turn make the canvas a functional one.

The remaining works in the main gallery reflect Mr. Armleder's involvement with something completely different: objects that exude an unused newness. That they are often musical instruments gives them the intensity of high-precision crafting, and thus they tend to overpower the blank or sparsely configured canvases with which they are grouped. When one sees four French horns affixed to the wall directly above a blue canvas striped with a single horizontal line of red, we are made to consider that a French horn is, after all, a striking object, but not much else comes to mind.

Sometimes, it is possible to make Mr. Armleder wants to make about perception and presence life as opposed to art. When he a tall white canvas — a generalist blank painting — a large white fiberglass air used on the top of semitrailers, the air shields win hands as esthetic objects. They firmly present, their enameled surfaces more and eye-catching. But the stration is just that, a demonstration. These new pieces make you wonder how much Mr. Armleder ate the patina and the added objects that are old. He takes off when he takes a half of it white. Generally formed and delicately the instrument remains out pretense. This piece in the room, is the best in the

On view at the Patricia 357 East Ninth Street a sampler of Mr. Armleder's unaccompanied furniture. They seem to model the laid-back, slightly worn design series of big red blowup of polka dots of white circles on if one had drawn suggests a rug the designed by Ell 1930's; a third series in deliberate in Poons's poured Mr. Armleder and for wholesale the Color Field works, Mr. Armleder's as anonymous or as objects people with spans. Nonetheless can also be re strained, and them for the viewer over the Combined, add up to Mr. in this country characterized kinds of que art to ask, wait, until convincing answers The show continues through Hearn, through

...e that point in real flanks
c Mod-th two shields er truck ds-down re more unctional luminous s demonstration.
u appreci-der needs fullness of much bet-grand piano and paints nely trans-abstracted," oddy within the back now.

Hearn Gallery, at Avenue C, is nieder's paint-by any furni-take as their anonymity of objects. In one, a lots suggests a fabric; another, black ground (as round a tin can).
could have been en Gray in the ms to be executed itation of Larry paintings, making ong the first to go in appropriations from esthetic. With these eder proposes paint-ous objects of décor, contemplation for ery short attention less, their quietness nd as ascetic and res hard not to respect r refusal to hit the head.
these exhibitions do not Armlieder's best outing
ry. Nonetheless, they rather succinctly the tions that he wants his nd make one willing to ext time, for more con-ers.
at the Gibson gallery con-gh June 27; the one at gh June 28.

fogal

NEW YORK 455 SPRING STREET - NOW OPEN · 785 MADISON AVENUE · 611 MADISON AVENUE
WWW.FOGAL.COM